skrit manuscripts exstant in the East India House, in the Bodleian library and in Paris: I owe them also to the Nestor of Sanskrit philologists, the celebrated Professor H. H. Wilson and to the Rev. Dr. W. H. Mill, who both, with equal benevolence and kindness, granted me the most liberal use of their excellent libraries. I owe them finally to the Honourable Court of Directors of the East India Company, under whose most generous patronage this edition is to be printed. To requite all these most undeserved favours, I promise all possible energy and incessant activity, the most diligent care and accuracy in order to bring this edition to a speedy conclusion and a good one. May it be so!
